

Loose Spoke Sinks Sailer...Bob Mitchell crashed his '67 Jaguar XK-E on the Corniche today...Police pointed to the untuned spokes as the reason for the crash.

Dateline Nice, Alps Maritime, November 22, 2042.

R P (Bob) Mitchell died yesterday, at the tender age of 91. He had decided long ago that Heaven was a no-go, opting instead for the unconventional and warmer Southern route.

Once safely arrived, the plan was to join with various kindred spirits (late brother Stephen) and cousins, and cruise Hell. He and his twin sister (who survives him) were born in San Francisco, CA., the product of an ill-advised union between a public utilities heir and a munitions heiress. As that greatly regretted merger died it's natural death, the children were often left to their own devices...Wandering was considered a noble pursuit, and greatly encouraged...Which explains why their passports were continually being replaced...And why their now divorced parents were continually shocked at their reappearances.

Bob had had the poor judgement of blowing a recent inheritance on an English sports car, which now required employment in order to service and maintain it. He worked in the industry for several decades, until retiring.

He is survived by a 1966 Ford Galaxie Convertible (7 Litre), a 1974 Cadillac Eldorado Convertible, and a yet to be restored 1987 Me/Be 560 SL roadster...The Inheritance Review Board (IRB) is comprised of his three children, and 5 grandchildren. There will be no service, but an open Bar between 5-7 PM on 29Nov42 at the Cercle des Matelots, Quai D'Orsay, Nice
